| Course Contents                 | The Masters Honours Project (MHP) forms the spine of the HPM-students programme. The MHP covers necessary activities that are aimed at gathering, integrating, and accumulating knowledge related to the topic chosen by the HPM-student and to meet the honours goals. It covers and integrates the learning in the broadest sense of the HPM-student. Each student is facilitated by a coach from the IDE-staff, who supports the student (when necessary) in making decisions, showing new pathways, and providing contacts regarding the students project. Active participation within both the IDE and TUD Honours community as well as a broader discussion and interaction with peers from research or practice relevant to the chosen HP topic is an integral part of the Honours Project. One of the main activities in the IDE Honours Community is the organisation of the Masters Honours Seminar that runs at least once each semester (depending on the number of students active in the program). Each HPM-IDE student acts in a variety of roles within this seminar throughout the three semesters of his/her honours programme. The roles are: Support role (organisation committee) (1st HPM semester) Plan, develop and execute own track (program chair) (2nd HPM semester) Participate actively (participant) (3rd HPM semester) Showcase of your honours project in the HPM-IDE gallery (at the start of your project (e.g., during the HPM-IDE kickoff) you present a preliminary HPM profile, and you submit a final showcase demonstrating the results honours project results to complete your HPM project (part of the final deliverables) The Honours Community allows students to show their: professional skills, such as coaching, giving peer feedback, and building a portfolio, and; presentation skills, such as communicating and disseminating insights and results with/to peers in the field outside the TUD community. Independency is key to the Masters Honours Project. Students initiate a large proportion of the project and plan, execute, and manage it accordingly. In this way, the student shows that he/she is capable of initiating and running a project from vision to realisation. Activities in the MHP could be, but are not limited to doing interviews with experts related to the HPM-topic, collect and read literature, do research, writing propositions, perform experiments, and/or design and evaluate interventions and prototypes. The final deliverables of the MHP are threefold: 1) the Knowledge Product aims to transfer the knowledge and insights gained to the student community and the staff of the IDE-faculty. 2) the Showcase featured at the HPM-IDE gallery covers the insights gained in an easy to grasp (and stand-alone) form, e.g. a poster, video clip or model. 3) the Honours Thesis is an academic report that, similar to a graduation report, shows in a logical order the rationale the HPM-IDE project. The Honours Thesis motivates the justification of the work done, the approach followed, and decisions taken leading to the Knowledge Product. In short, it reports on relevant activities that have led to mastering the Honours Project, properly referring to literature, courses followed, interviews, or websites. Special attention should be given to the lessons learnt in the Masters Honours Seminar. |    |
| Study Goals                     | The study goals of the MHP at the IDE faculty are in keeping with the study goals of the TUD Honours Programme Masters (and thus at other TUD faculties). The work done and results delivered must illustrate/show that the student is capable of: Integrating all findings, insights and progress related to his/her HPM-topic into a coherent whole; Applying academic qualities like theorizing, model forming and reasoning in his/her honours programme; Switching from abstraction levels related to his/her HPM-topic in order to create an integrated knowledge base; Collaborating with disciplines outside his/her field of education; Planning, organizing and executing independently a challenging project with at the outset unclear goals and deliverables; Elaborating on the societal/scientific/educational consequences of the insights gained in his/her honours programme; Writing a brief and academic report about his/her work (Honours thesis); Creating a knowledge product that covers the findings of 16 ec work in transferrable form: on paper, digital, presentation or as part of a public gallery; Community building with other HP students, within and across cohort, within and across faculty, as well as with peers in the domain relevant to your HP, outside the IDE faculty. Coaching skills: being able to collaborate with people from different educational and cultural backgrounds, building a shared way of working, addressing conflicts. Reflective attitude/behavior: sharpening their vision and interest areas and formulating ideas for Honours Integration Project. Communicating ideas and design intentions to different audiences and with different means, with confidence and flair, both academically and in other aspects of their lives.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |    |
| Education Method                | Independently run project under supervision of the HPM-coach. The MHPs total study load is 16 ec. Approximately 65% is related to the project work and the creation of the knowledge product, 25% related to participation in activities related to the Masters Honours Seminar and the creation of the Showcase, and 10% related to writing of the Honours Thesis.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |    |
| Assessment                      | The Masters Honours Project (MHP) is assessed by the students HPM-coach and the HPM-coordinator of his/her MSc-programme. The grade will be a pass or no pass. No further detailing. The MHP including active participation in the IDE/TU Delft honours community, needs to be successfully completed before the student requests the Greenlight meeting for graduation. Hereto, all three final MHP deliverables addressing the criteria outlined below, should be submitted to hpm-io@tudelft.nl in time. The first deliverable of the MHP concerns a Knowledge product, which communicates the acquired knowledge/ insights during the project to a specified or general public. Examples of a knowledge product are a publication in an academic journal, a conference paper, publication of the findings in a sector magazine, a popular-scientific magazine, by documentary/movie, or via a renowned weblog. It is also possible to publish your findings in the form of a 2D or 3D object in public space or a museum or a public presentation. When choosing the latter option, this always needs to be supported with a brief description reflecting the findings and reasoning for presenting it in the chosen way. The second deliverable is the Showcase. The aim of the Showcase is to exhibit the results of honours projects in the Gallery of the Masters Honours Program (part of the Education section at the faculty's main website). The Showcase must clearly illustrate and convey the insights gained to a generic audience. As part of the Showcase, each HPM student should make sure their project has been included in the gallery with a representative image and a brief description explaining the main results.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |    |

The third deliverable is the Honours Thesis. The leading line in this thesis is reporting on the activities that supported the creation of the new knowledge, including the creation of the 1st deliverable: the knowledge product. One of the final chapters of the thesis should be dedicated to the development of the knowledge product, its content, and the consequences for the futures of relevant subjects or stakeholders (e.g., education, research, society, students, business, creative industry). An executive summary and a critical/personal reflection on the student's Masters Honours Project should be included. The honours thesis should not exceed 25 pages, apart from appendices with additional data and information.

Ensure your name and a clear reference to the HPM IDE program are included in each deliverable (Your name, honours cohort, acknowledge your honours coach, and mention that the work is part of the Masters Honours Program of the Faculty Industrial Design Engineering). Please label the final names of your final deliverables accordingly (e.g., HPM0xx_KnowledgeProduct_YourName).

| Course Contents                 | This course is focused on MSc and PhD students who are about to enter the professional field at companies, institutes or the university. As you take up a professional role in a large organization involving public work, public policy, and governance, you will take up a position as an expert. In three workshops students will engage both with the notion of the expert as well as with general concepts of debate and argumentation with the goal to develop specific debating and argumentation skills from the position of an expert in your future profession..                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |   |

| Education Method                | The workshops: We meet in person over the course of three 3-hour workshops, each is roughly divided into two parts of an hour and a half. One part focuses on questions surrounding expertise and the role of the expert in complex organizations, and the other part focuses on basic concepts of debate and argumentation practicing with various debating techniques and styles of argumentation. The three workshops will have the following themesWorkshop 1: part A: Introduction to the notion of an expert / part B: Introduction to key concepts of argumentation and debateWorkshop 2: part A Stakeholder and Expert Mapping / part B the Art of Persuasion / Balancing Logos, Ethos and PathosWorkshop 3: part A Skepticism about expertise and how to avoid it / part B Arguing persuasively as an expert. / Guest lecture from a professionalThe Pitch: You bring what you learn into practice by developing a pitch. The goal of the pitch is to exercise defending a position in a public debate as an expert in technology. The course provides you with tools and techniques to structure your argument. You will be helped by an individual tutor to make your position convincingly and succinctly, and to understand and counter the arguments of those that oppose your position. The pitch is an oral presentation of 5 minutes, supported with a slide presentation and a text document which describes the argument structure of your pitch. |   |
| Assessment                      | This course is graded as pass/fail based on the overall participation in the workshop and the successful development and presentation of a pitch                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |   |

| Course Contents                 | During the course, we offer you a first orientation on key aspects of business leadership. We want to inspire you by connecting you to experienced alumni, and help you explore your own leadership skills in a safe learning environment. In short: we want to prepare you for your transition into the business world! The framework for this tour comprises four mindsets: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Strategic lens: make the right trade-offs</li> <li>2. Political lens: be ready to play power and influence</li> <li>3. People lens: connect and inspire</li> <li>4. Operational lens: execute and deliver</li> </ol> Who is Business Leadership for Engineers for? Students of science and engineering are analytical, comfortable with numbers, and tech-savvy. These strengths are key competencies for leadership positions. But leadership requires more mindsets to deal with economic mechanisms, political power processes, and social processes. These mechanisms and processes are not typically included in the curriculum of science and engineering students. Our ambition is to help you develop these additional mindsets and become more effective technical and business leaders. Why is leadership so important for you as an engineer? All grand challenges of our time are technology-dominated. Whether it is the energy transition or green transport, climate action, or cybersecurity future leaders will need a thorough knowledge of technology to deal with these challenges. In our interconnected, technology-driven world, organizations heavily depend on leadership at all levels meaning that leadership is not limited to those who have formal leadership positions, but that everyone is a leader. Everyone should be able to see the big strategic picture, inspire and commit others, seize business opportunities, and accept responsibility for decisions made. Who will you learn from? Leadership experts at TU Delft and TU Delft alumni will give several lectures. You will have the opportunity to meet CEOs and practitioners of impactful start-ups and companies. We will invite them to share their experiences with you. You can ask them your questions, learn from them and probably, they can also learn from you as representatives of a new generation. Whether it is about the selection of cases, leadership concepts, or theories we believe that developing these skills in an interactive environment will contribute to your personal and professional growth and will make you better leaders of the future. The course is designed to have many components, covering a broad spectrum of learning goals. There will be sessions dedicated to exploring various dilemmas in leadership, including strategy, pricing, marketing, risk, power, and negotiation. This skill set will enable you to thrive in business settings. You will not only learn these skills by seeing but also by doing it, for example, in negotiation and pitching workshops. Alongside this, you will also be equipped with tools to reflect upon your personal leadership style and to balance your strengths and weaknesses with your ambitions. |   |
